2. Citations and explanations (Rule 70.7)

The invention according to the application aims at providing a system and a method for associating time with specific tasks in order to provide a user with the possibility to overview the periods of time spent on said different tasks.

The object of the claimed invention is accomplished by arranging sensors on a person or objects, said sensors regularly detecting the location of the person or object, collecting information from said sensors, storing the information in a context log, processing the information and presenting the processed information in a context graph. More concisely expressed; the sensors attached to a person provides a system with data about where said person is at a specific time and the system presents the information in a graph.

Continuation of: Box V

Document D1 discloses a system for identification and surveillance of employees and tools comprising wireless communication, sensors, storage means and means for processing data.

Document D2 discloses a system for the surveillance of with regard to time and location.

Documents D3-D6 disclose different systems for tracking/logging persons within defined premises with regard to time and location.

Document D7 discloses (see paragraph 5.2) a system including a so called diary agent and badges arranged on persons. The diary agent records all places a badge wearer goes to during a day, how long the wearer spends at the location and who else is at the same location (indicating a meeting). A badge wearer may have an online diary file containing appointment and information about actual meetings that have taken place. In paragraph 5.1 document D7 further describes that a doctor in a hospital may use the badges arranged on patient in order to monitor the location of the patients.

Documents D8 and D9 disclose systems making use of contexts for the cooperation between users without using tags/badges or sensors.

A system and a method according to independent claims 1 and 8 is known from document D7. Thus, the invention defined in said claims is not new and consequently lacks novelty and inventive step.

Continuation of:

The subject matter of claims 2 and 9 differs from what is disclosed by document D7, which is considered to best represent the prior art, in that said claims explicitly states that the location information is presented graphically and that said graphic presentation comprises present time as well as a period of past time. It is considered obvious that the diary of document D7 is graphically presenting the information and that said presentation includes some kind of time axis and, thus, shows present and past time. Said features have to be said are implicitly expressed by the term "diary". Therefore, the invention according to dependent claims 2 and 9 cannot be considered inventive.

The subject matter of dependent claims 3-7 and 10-14 only differs from what is described in document D7 by administrative features and cannot be considered inventive.

The invention according to claims 1 and 8 is not novel and does not involve an inventive step. The invention according to claims 2-7 and 9-14 is novel, but does not involve an inventive step. The invention according to claims 1-14 is industrially applicable.
